there will always be a need to raise revenue, but there has to be a way to review the effects of such a big change in doing business. money isn't always the answer to everything. in fact more money might make the government less efficient. remember that when government office receives budget they have to utilize all of it to receive the same amount the following year or get an increase. in this way budget will most likely be misused. i have no doubt that big businesses will pay accountants and professionals to avoid paying for this increase in tax. small businesses might consider not paying for tax altogether. if the government wants to reduce poverty than it must take away certain advantages of the rich, or at least level the playing field.
